

 Print
  Download
  Bookmark
  Tag
  Comment

pleurisy and bronchitis, and was only able to be brought up. He was tried on the charge of attempted case is amongst our illustrations.

ERILS OF THE DEEP.

"Illyrian," on her last outward voyage instrumental in saving twenty-four crew of the large American ship

It appears that the "Illyrian" left the 17th ult., and on the 25th, about 2:30 by 59-20. She at once bore down and her to be the "Isaac Webb," half-past one in the morning, and the "Illyrian" immediately set about tow, the whole of whom were soon on board the "Illyrian." It seems the "Webb" was a vessel of 1497 tons was bound from Antwerp for New 24th, the day previous to the rescue, violence sprang up from the south- which the ship made a heavy lurch to her cargo and coming round to she was thrown on her beam- was a high confused sea, and in order ets were out away, which eased her The crew then set to work to trim the up the water out of the ship, which ng rapidly. At two p.m. the foremast away with it the jibboom and spars- entirely at the mercy of the waves, could do nothing to help to keep her imitation was held, and it was decided the first opportunity. Several hours which time she was gradually settling and costs.

HORRIBLE DEATH.

On Saturday Mr. George Collier, the deputy coroner for East Middlesex, held an inquiry at the Tottenham Training Hospital as to the death of John William Pluck, aged fourteen, of 2, Ann's Cottages, Lower Edmonton. The deceased was employed at the Cuckoo Hall Sewage Farm, between Edmonton and Ponder's-end, where he had been at work through the summer. On the 9th of November he and a couple of men were ploughing, the deceased guiding the leading horse, and the ploughman the second animal, a vicious mare. They had got to the end of the field, and were turning to make a fresh furrow, when the chain-trace got across the legs of the mare. This scaring her, she started off, and before anyone could interfere caused the leader to swerve, throwing the deceased to the ground. The horses then reared three or four times, trampling the lad on each occasion, and finally started off down the furrow, the point of the ploughshare entering the boy's leg, and dragging him a distance of 150 yards before the horses could be pulled up. He was picked up in great agony and removed to the Training Hospital, where Mr. W. Burton, the house surgeon, found that the small bones in the leg were broken and the vessels cut, causing gangrene to set up. To arrest this amputation was resorted to, but without avail, and, after lingering for a week, death ensued on the 16th from blood-poisoning, the result of the combined injuries. It was clearly shown that the boy was well accustomed to horses, and that every precaution was taken with the skittish mare, and, the jury taking this view, returned a verdict of accidental death.